I'LL HOLD NEW MAYOR TO ACCOUNT

PM backs football initiative to combat extremism

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

PRIME Minister David Cameron is to play in a football match in Downing Street with teenagers from a west-London gang-busting project as the Government backs its pioneering drive against radicalisation.

The Premier is to join a team of youngsters in a game against a youth side from Molenbeek, the Belgian town at the centre of recent terror atrocities.

The show match will be held in the street outside No 10 to show that the Government is getting behind plans to roll out the scheme all over London. The Kensington-based Unity of Faiths Foundation's Football for Unity project, hailed for scoring new futures for more than a thousand disadvantaged teenagers in west London, is to be spread across the capital as the smart new game plan against the city's problem with gangs, knife crime and radicalisation.

Rock legend's basement exit

ROCK legend Brian May and TV star Anita Dobson are quitting their west London home after blaming basement-building neighbours and Kensington and Chelsea council for driving them out and 'ruining their lives'.

The Queen guitarist and his wife are to move to the country after a scathing attack on the council for allowing so many iceberg homes in their neighbourhood.

May claims that living with home extensions by "basement-building Barbarians" has become so stressful that one of his neighbours died from nervous exhaustion.

Toxic tax fears

HUNDREDS of thousands of motorists face paying £24 for driving in central London after Labour's new mayor proposed an extra charge on polluting cars.

The £12.50 'toxic tax' would be paid on top of the £11.50 congestion charge to penalise motorists whose cars belch out the most toxic fumes.
